WATER MANAGEMENT

Alfa Energy provides water auditing services to commercial and industrial customers. We enable clients to understand, monitor and control all aspects of their water consumption and consistently reduce their charges.

Overview of the water market

With utility charges becoming a key focus of UK business due to unparalleled price changes, all lost areas need to be monitored and managed. Water and wastewater charges are often overlooked, and often the area of greater opportunity for cost saving.

With UK water being the third most expensive in the world, and cost to UK business is growing year on year, it is imperative that customers get to grips with water expenditure.

With supplier and subsequent costs being dictated by geographical location, customers often assume there is little that can be done to reduce their annual water expenditure other than by consuming less. This is far from reality. There are numerous opportunities available which vary greatly within each supplier region and are dependant upon the type of business you operate and supply specifics of your premises.

It is a common misconception that opportunities only lie with those who utilise water as a core element of their operation. Alfa Energy have assisted all sectors of business in achieving fantastic savings, from producers and manufacturing industries to the financial and retail sector.

Currently 13 water and wastewater companies exist in the UK. These are the tacit monopolies with which you are familiar such as Thames Water, Welsh and Anglian Water. Many independent water only companies still exist too, in fact providing incoming water supply with the waste water treatment provide by the relevant regional suppliers.

Alfa Energy has successfully worked alongside its customers since its launch in 1995. As UK energy markets have evolved and customers' needs have become more defined, Alfa Energy has adapted to this challenging environment and developed a range of value added services and products.

Alfa Energy Water Division was established to offer clients a service that would allow them to identify and achieve cost saving opportunities through a Water Audit and Implementation Service. Our approach has been described as 'refreshing', and we are continually investigating new ways for our clients to manage their water expenditure. This includes, but is not limited to, advising on water efficiency, contract evaluation, negotiating the best possible tariffs and the recovery of past overcharges.

Why look at Water?

Any reduction in your utility expenditure will have a positive affect on your profitability; whilst we hope that you are already undertaking measures to stem the tide of rising utility budgets, now is the time to address the issues surrounding your water charges.

The analysis of water/wastewater charges and the implementation of cost saving recommendations requires specialist knowledge of the 20+ UK charging schemes, understanding of industry legislation, awareness of precedent and cultivation of successful Supplier and Regulator contacts. It is fair to say that most businesses have neither the time nor the expertise to tackle this task in house.

Effective water management can save you significant sums of money. If no previous attempt has been made to manage water costs then it is possible to achieve financial savings of 20% to 60% at little or no extra cost. Savings of over 70% of total water costs have been experienced with any initial financial outlay recovered within the year.

If you thought that nothing could be done to reduce your water charges... Well, think again.

By 2010, charges for water supply and wastewater collection/treatment will be on average 43% higher than the charges incurred in 2005.

What is your company to do about it?
